

Top attractions in Paris

(Tour Eiffel)

(Louvren Musée)

(Parc des Princes)

When PSG's season has come to an end, the Parc des Princes invites you to huge music concerts. Artists from all over the world take the stage and rock Paris. Some of the stars who performed in the stadium are the Rolling Stones, Bruce Springsteen, Robbie Williams, U2 and the Red Hot Chili Peppers. The next concert will be held on June 26, when the American punk rock band Green Day will take to the stage for Les Parc des Princes audiences.

The food at the Parc des Princes is similar fare to food you will find in stadiums all around France and Europe. There are burgers, hot dogs, French Fries and Pizza to curb your appetite. However, the food quality isn't the greatest in the whole world and the relative lack of kiosks does result in there being some rather large queues. Honestly, you may be better off eating beforehand. It may be the most famous stadium in France but its modern counterparts outshine it in this department.

In 1889, the Paris World's Fair coincided with the 100th anniversary of the French Revolution. Ahead of the festivities, designer Gustave Eiffel was commissioned to build the spectacular tower. Before the Chrysler Building was erected in 1930, the Eiffel Tower was the world's tallest building. A television mast at the top gave the tower 24 extra meters in 1959.

Construction:

The 10,000-tonne Eiffel Tower consists of a metal structure of around 12,000 iron beams and 2.5 million bolts. Many French people claim that the staircase in the tower has 1,792 steps, the same figure as the year the French Republic was introduced, but in fact the correct number of steps is 1,665.

Practical:

Tornet står på Champs de mars och är öppet för allmänheten alla dagar, året runt. Normala öppettider är mellan klockan 09.30 och 18.00. Sommartid är det öppet ända till midnatt. Det går att åka hiss upp i tornet om du inte vill ta trapporna. Du bör komma tidigt på dagen om du vill undvika att stå i kö.
